UK and U.S. 'draw up joint plan to attack Iran': Evidence of nuclear programme raises tension in Middle East

*Whitehall figures say Iran is 'newly aggressive - and we are not sure why'

*Iran 'has enough enriched uranium for four nuclear weapons'

*Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu pushing for invasion

*Tel Aviv test-fires rockets capable of carrying nuclear warheads into Iran

*Report reveals China continues to supply Tehran with missiles and other conventional weapons

*Obama says nuclear programme remains a threat and calls on Iran to reveal its intentions

The UK and U.S. are drawing up plans to attack Iran amid growing tensions in the Middle East, it was claimed last night. Barack Obama and David Cameron are preparing for war after reports that Iran now has enough enriched uranium for four nuclear weapons. President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad's hardline regime in Tehran has been linked to three assassination plots on foreign soil, according to senior officials in Whitehall.

Serious threat: David Cameron and Barack Obama are drawing up plans for an invasion of Iran, as the country's nuclear development spirals out of control.

Iran has come sharply back into focus following the end of the Libya conflict. And the unrest has been inflamed by sabre-rattling from top politicians in Israel.

President Obama said Iran's nuclear programme continues to pose a threat and that he and French president Nicolas Sarkozy want the international community to maintain pressure on the country to admit its intentions. The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) is preparing to reveal intelligence on Iran's alleged nuclear arms experiments.

Left: Aggressive stance: Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad has been linked to assassinations on foreign soil and is pressing closer to building a nuclear bomb; Right: On the attack: Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is lobbying Western forces to take action against Iran

Iran has consistently denied that it is trying to build nuclear weapons and insists the programme is for peaceful purposes. The U.S., Britain and France want the IAEA to share its intelligence, but Russia and China are pressing for the report to be delayed or scrapped entirely.

Yesterday it was revealed that Tel Aviv had successfully test-fired a rocket capable of carrying a nuclear warhead which could strike Iran. Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Defence Minister Ehud Barak are reportedly agitating for a pre-emptive attack against the Islamic state. The UK would be likely to agree to any U.S. decision to invade, even though the Ministry of Defence are stretched to breaking point by swingeing budget cuts and wars in Afghanistan and Libya.

An MoD spokesman said: 'The British government believes that a dual track strategy of pressure and engagement is the best approach to address the threat from Iran's nuclear programme and avoid regional conflict. 'We want a negotiated solution – but all options should be kept on the table.'

A special unit at the MoD has been instructed to work out the UK's strategy if the Army should invade Iran. War planners will look at potential deployments of Royal Navy ships and submarines equipped with Tomahawk cruise missiles and RAF fighter jets armed with precision-guided Paveway IV and Brimstone bombs and missiles, surveillance planes and air-to-air refuelling.

Standby: A convoy of mine-resistant U.S. tanks, pictured in Iraq, could now be deployed to Iran

Ready for violence: A plume of smoke left by the missile Israel test-fired yesterday (right), thought to be a Jericho missile. Left, another cruise missile. The Israel missile was capable of carrying a nuclear warhead - More...Israel speeds up ballistic missile tests as speculation grows of attack on Iran

Senior Whitehall figures have expressed alarm that Iran appeared 'newly aggressive – and we are not quite sure why'. Western intelligence has also suggested that Iran is hiding the material for a covert nuclear weapons programme in fortified bunkers which cannot be reached by conventional missiles.

Barack Obama is understood to have no wish to attack Iran in the run-up to the White House elections next year. But Washington may be pressured by Israel if Iran's nuclear programme is not curtailed.

Mr Netanyahu is apparently also lobbying Cabinet members for a military strike, despite the likelihood it would draw a retaliation from Iran. An Israeli defence official said the rocket launched by the military had merely been a long-planned test for a 'propulsion system'.

Further information about the rocket was censored by the military, but foreign reports said it was a long-range Jericho missile - capable of carrying a nuclear warhead and striking Iran.

Israel considers Iran its most dangerous threat. It cites Tehran's nuclear programme, ballistic missile development, repeated references by the Iranian leader to Israel's destruction and the government's support for anti-Israel militant groups Hamas and Hezbollah.

Mr Ahmadinejad denies his country is trying to produce a bomb, claiming its nuclear programme is only intended to produce energy for the oil-rich country. But the work could only be for the design and development of a nuclear warhead, according to the International Atomic Energy Agency's report.

Ready to strike: The Natanz nuclear site, 130 miles south of Tehran, where Iran is believed to be enriching uranium

Concerns: The nuclear power plant in Bushehr, southern Iran. The facility began to be fuelled last year
 Israel have repeatedly insisted that economic sanctions could persuade Iran to halt its nuclear ambitions. Diplomats have been lobbying the international community for tougher sanctions - but have now stepped up their interventions. It comes as Mr Netanyahu defended his decision to expand settlements in east Jerusalem. He said it was Israel's 'right' and 'duty' to build in all parts of its capital. Israel captured east Jerusalem in the 1967 war, along with the West Bank. Palestinians claim that section of the city as their future capital.

BREACHED OBLIGATIONS, DEAD SCIENTISTS AND A COMPUTER WORM: IRAN DEVELOPS ITS NUCLEAR CAPABILITY

Inspection: Technicians from the International Atomic Energy Agency check the uranium conversion plant in Isfahan, Iran. Tehran has repeatedly failed to meet its obligations by revealing the construction of nuclear facilities.

Work to develop nuclear facilities began in the 1990s, with the Russian Federation providing experts, although the U.S. blocked the trade of equipment or construction of technology for Iran.

International attention was drawn to its developing nuclear potential in 2002 after an Iranian dissident revealed the existence of two sites that were under construction - a uranium enrichment facility in Natanz and a heavy water facility in Arak.

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) sought access to these facilities, but it wasn't until 2003 that Iran agreed to cooperate with it and suspend enrichment activities. The investigation revealed Iran had failed to meet several obligations, including divulging the importation of uranium from China. The following year, work began on the construction of a heavy water reactor, but again Iran announced a suspension of uranium enrichment under the terms of the Paris Agreement.

After Mahmoud Ahmadinejad's election as president in August 2005, Iran removed the seals on its enrichment equipment and effectively rejected the Paris Agreement. President Ahmadinejad announced that Iran had successfully enriched uranium in a televised address in 2006, where he announced the country had joined those with nuclear technology.

Then U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice had urged the UN Security Council to consider 'strong steps' to force Tehran to shelve its nuclear ambitions. Subsequently the UN Security Council has passed seven resolutions on Iran insisting it ends its enrichment activities. These have included freezing the assets of people and organisations linked to its nuclear and missile programmes.

Three nuclear scientists working on the programme have been killed in the last two years and a computer virus also affected enrichment at the Natanz plant in 2010.

Yesterday, Mr Netanyahu's office said 2,000 new apartments would be built in Jewish areas of east Jerusalem.

Officials said the move was a response to recent unilateral steps by the Palestinians, particularly its acceptance into the UN cultural agency UNESCO.

He has blamed Israel for disruptions to the nuclear programme, including the mysterious assassinations of a string of Iranian nuclear scientists and a computer virus that wiped out some nuclear centrifuges.

But a report by the UN's nuclear watchdog due to be published next week will provide fresh evidence of Iran's activity, bringing the Middle East a step closer to another devastating conflict.

It is the latest of a series of quarterly bulletins on Iran's arms programme, but will contain an unprecedented level of detail on research and experiments carried out in recent years. It comes as a draft report revealed China is continuing to provide advanced missiles and other conventional arms to Iran, in violation of UN sanctions against the regime.

The report, from the U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission, revealed China sold $312million of arms to Iran, second only to Russia.

It also noted that after Russia began cutting back arms transfers to Iran in 2008, China became the largest arms supplier to the Iranian military.

Most of the weapons transfers involved sales of Chinese anti-ship cruise missiles, including C-802 missiles that China promised the U.S. in 1997 would not be exported to Iran.

The report says: 'Because of the relatively short range of these missiles, China's provision of them to Iran does not violate the Iran, North Korea and Syria Non-proliferation Act of 2006, which seeks to prevent the transfer of only those missiles that can carry a 500kg warhead more than 300km.

'It is possible, however, that these transactions violate the Iran Freedom Support Act, or the Comprehensive Iran Sanctions, Accountability and Divestment Act of 2010, which both use the ambiguous term "advanced conventional weapons."

TIMELINE OF DEVELOPMENT

February, 2009: IAEA Director-General Mohamed ElBaradei said Iran was not allowing UN inspectors to determine if it was working developing nuclear weapons.

June, 2009: IAEA reveals it was blocked from inspecting nuclear facilities, but Mr ElBaradei voices opposition to Israel support for military strike, saying it would turn region into 'ball of fire'.

July, 2009: Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said he had agreed with President Barack Obama to engage with Iran until the end of the year, but the country would be free to take on the 'existential threat' with military force after the deadline passed. Mr Obama also gave Iran until September to adhere to IAEA proposals or 'face consequences'. Iran threatens to strike back at Israel if its nuclear facilities were targeted.

September, 2009: Second enrichment facility is revealed 20 miles north of Qom, Iran.

January, 2010: Masoud Ali Mohammadi - a particle physicist - is killed by a remote-control bomb as he left for work.

August, 2010: Iran acquires nuclear fuel rods from Russia and begins fuelling of Bushehr I reactor - reportedly to generate electricity.

October, 2010: Stuxnet computer worm infects systems at Natanz enrichment plant, causing centrifuges to crash and suspending work.

November, 2010: Second physicist, Majid Shahriar, killed when bomb was stuck to the side of his car by a motorcyclist.

July, 2011: Dariush Rezaei - third physicist involved in Iran's nuclear programme - shot dead.

Circumcision: Male Genital Mutilation

Posted on April 12, 2012

How in the world did we ever come to a place where male genital mutilation is not only completely accepted as a societal custom, but also embraced as a religious practice?! Truly, it is regarded as a rite of passage into this world of pain and suffering.

It's like, after the baby boy is born, as if that's not traumatic enough, he is then forced to suffer the excruciating pain and shock of having a very important piece of his body cut off ... from the most sensitive part of his body, no less!

Just who is it (or who was it) that determined that the male genitalia was somehow flawed by the Creator?

Hello.

HELLO!

HELLLOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOO !!!

What in God's good name is going on here? Millions throughout a whole society ... an entire civilization have been stampeded into cutting off the foreskin of infant boys. As though such a horrendous surgical procedure is without pain and AWESOME consequences.

Where in the world do we begin with this one?!?!

We don't mean which of the top circumcising nations either like the USA, UK, Canada, Australia, etc.

We apologize if it appears that we have departed from our usual coaching style. Yes, admittedly we have some serious baggage with this little humdinger. WE WANT OUR FORESKINS BACK!

Now that we've gotten that out of the way, let's really explore what's going on here.

Mothers especially, please know that this is NOT a pretty picture at all. How could it be?

The mother's basic instinct is to always fiercely protect their newborn, as well as their young children.

So, let's get busy with the facts as opposed to the terrible disinformation, misinformation and false information put out by the medical establishment and religious groups.

First and foremost the foreskin of the male penis serves a very important purpose; that is to protect and lubricate the head of the penis. From a sensitivity and vulnerability standpoint, can you imagine how much more exposed such an organ is when it is stripped of this vital skin covering?

Here's a fairly exhaustive list of what is actually removed with circumcision as quoted from Webmagicion.com.

Circumcision Removes More Than Just Skin

When an infant's penis is circumcised, this is what is forever lost:

- 50 to 80% of the total penile skin system, radically immobilizing the remaining shaft skin. If unfolded and spread out flat, the average adult foreskin measures 15 to 20 square inches, about the size of a postcard.
- Most of the erogenous nerve tissue on the penis. The foreskin contains between 10,000 and 20,000 specialized erotogenic nerve endings of various types, which can discern slight motion, subtle changes in temperature, and fine gradations in texture. The amputation of this highly-innervated tissue reduces the sensitivity of the penis to that of ordinary skin.
- The densely innervated Ridged Bands, a specialized, extremely erogenous section of the prepuce located at the juncture of the outer foreskin and inner mucosal tissue.
- Approximately half of the smooth muscle sheath called the Dartos fascia.
- Thousands of coiled, fine-touch receptor cells, including Meissner's Corpuscles.
- An estimated 240 feet of microscopic nerves, including branches of the dorsal nerve.
- Several feet of blood vessels, including the frenular artery and portions of the dorsal artery, the loss of which interrupts normal blood flow to the shaft and glans of the penis, severely damaging its natural function.

- Lymphatic vessels, the loss of which interrupts the lymph flow within the body's immune system.

- The entire immunological defense system of the soft mucosa which produces antibacterial and antiviral proteins such as lysozyme, the same as found in mother's milk, and plasma cells which secrete immunoglobulin antibodies.

- Ectopic sebaceous glands, which lubricate, moisturize, and regulate a healthy pH balance, thereby maintaining the erotogenic sensitivity of the glans.

- The apocrine glands, which produce pheromones, nature's powerful, silent, invisible sexual signals/stimulants.

- Specialized epithelial Langerhans cells, an immune system component.

- Estrogen receptors – the purpose and value of which are not yet fully understood.

- The connective synechiae, which fuses the foreskin to the glans while the penis develops during infancy. It is destroyed when the foreskin is torn from the glans during the circumcision operation.

- The frenulum, the sensitive 'V'-shaped tethering structure at the base of the glans on the underside of the penis, is also usually amputated, severed, or destroyed.

- The protective covering of the glans, which is actually an internal organ. The foreskin shields the glans from abrasion, drying, and callusing, and protects the glans from dirt and other contaminants.

- Loss of sexual sensitivity in the glans. The glans of an intact penis is normally a soft, moist, delicate organ, similar in texture to the smooth skin lining the inside of the lips of your mouth. When the foreskin is amputated it no longer provides protection to the glans against abrasion, or even exposure to the air. This causes the glans to dry out – imagine what would happen to your eyeballs if your eyelids were removed. It also causes the skin on the glans to thicken and harden as a protection against abrasion. This 'callousing' effect – known as keratinization – causes any remaining nerves on the glans to become buried under many layers of skin cells, severely reducing the sensitivity of the glans to external stimulation – such as a soft touch. The sensitivity continues to decrease over time, until eventually all sensitivity is lost.

- 10% to 20% of the penis's circumference, because its double-layered wrapping of loose foreskin is now missing, making the circumcised penis thinner.

- As much as one inch of the erect penis's length due to scarring, and shrinkage from loss of the mobile, richly-vascularized foreskin.

- The gliding action of the penis within its foreskin. The foreskin's abundance (15-20 sq.in.) of specialized, self-lubricating skin gives the natural penis its anatomically unique ability to smoothly slide back and forth within itself, thereby permitting non-abrasive intercourse, without drying out the vagina.

- The deep pink to red to dark purple natural coloration of the glans.
- There is considerable evidence that a circumcised penis loses its capacity for subtle electromagnetic communication that occurs only during contact between mucous membranes, an interaction which contributes to the sense of the healing power of sexual ecstasy. In other words, circumcision forever diminishes the intensity of both the male and female orgasm and its physical, psychological, and spiritual benefits.
- Many babies die as a result of circumcision, a fact the circumcision industry obscures and conceals.

The preceding list was compiled as a public service by the WebMagician under the heading: Foreskin & Circumcision: The REAL Truth

Do you still plan on having your baby boy circumcised? Or, do you as an adult still plan on your own religious or medically advised circumcision?!

In Closing:

The medical procedure known as circumcision is truly a moral and physical abomination. Performing them brings shame upon all who participate – doctors, parents, nurses – because of how it victimizes the most vulnerable and powerless among us, our newborn infants. How society was ever brought to a point of accepting male genital mutilation as casually as it does is truly a study in mass brainwashing.

Look at how we all justifiably react to the terrible female mutilations in Africa! This is also very not right for the baby girls and everyone else involved. And the global outcry is having a positive effect on forever changing that custom.

There's a lot more to discuss concerning this extremely offensive medical procedure. Many of the real long term effects on the child and his life will be taken up in Circumcision Part II. When the far-reaching ramifications throughout all of society are better understood, a movement for systemic change will commence.

In the meantime, you might contemplate how a forever exposed, highly sensitive, sexual organ can be manipulated by the forces which surround the teenage boy, the young adult, the grown man who doesn't even know that these negative influences are continually at work throughout his environment. Think of all the consequences which have accrued over decades, which we see everywhere throughout the entire civilization.

For instance is there a connection between a population explosion of 7 billion people and this ever-increasing practice of circumcision over the past century?! This question will be discussed in Circumcision – Part II.

Circumcision: Male Genital Mutilation – Part II

Posted on April 23, 2012 by 1healthcoach

Before we address the parting question in Part I, we thought it would be instructive and revelatory to post information about the actual circumcision medical procedure. Again, we refer to the same excellent website which was created as a public service to this extraordinarily important topic. The following screenshot was taken from www.webmagician.com/pubservice/.

We would like to warn those who are sensitive to graphic surgical procedures that the following series of photos may be quite disturbing. However, a picture is worth a million words in this particular context of advocacy for the most vulnerable among us.

We apologize if these graphics offend anyone, but try to get into the boy infant's booties for a moment. Pretty darn frightening indeed, isn't it?!

The real consequences, however, are those which follow every circumcised male for the rest of their lives. Of what do we speak?

An exposed penis is much more excitable than one which has not been circumcised. The foreskin serves the purpose of protecting a highly sensitive organ which was made that way for a very good reason. When it is removed, friction between the exposed head and either underwear or pants greatly increases the opportunities for the penis to be physically excited. The ramifications of this single completely avoidable life-long predicament are truly catastrophic to both the man and his society.

Especially in an age that is replete with instances of graphic sexual content at every turn does this physical situation take on great significance. For many adolescent boys the constant friction can keep them in a state of constant low grade sexual excitation which will infect every part of their lives. As an example, especially at school where all the coeds sit across the aisle, the distraction from studies can be quite agitating.

A fully exposed penis is a much different organ than one that has not been circumcised, as we just described. There are many other life situations which arise for boys, young adults and grown men which challenge them to a much greater degree because this vital protective barrier has been snipped off.

For those who still doubt that the foreskin play an important part in the workings of the male genitalia, we have posted another excellent excerpt from www.webmagician.com/pubservice/.

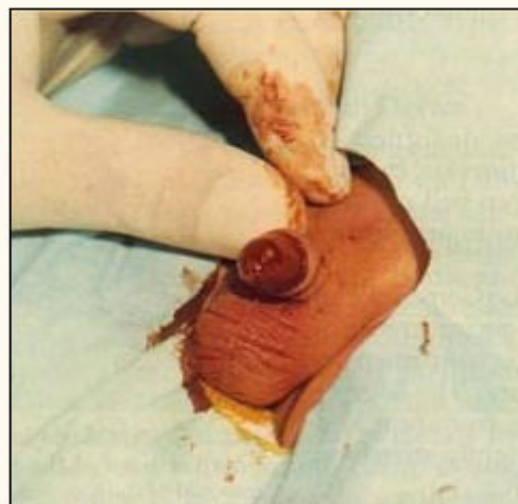

In closing we would like to mention that Circumcision Part III will take up more critical issues associated with INFANT GENITAL MUTILATION. As our friends at webmagician.com say, FORGET THE EUPHEMISM ... CALL IT EXACTLY WHAT IT IS!

Genital Mutilation: The Circumcision Operation

The following photographs are graphic images of a helpless infant being sexually mutilated. The amputation of an innocent child's genital tissues is not a pretty sight. If you cannot bear to look at photos of what actually happens to a baby during this operation, how can you possibly subject a newborn infant to the actual butchery?

The mutilation is done without anesthesia - because anesthesia is too dangerous. Note that the operation takes on average 20 to 30 minutes. If the doctor makes a mistake it will last even longer. Also note that circumcision - with and without anesthesia - CAN and DOES kill hundreds of babies every year. Unfortunately, the doctors never acknowledge their responsibility in these deaths, and so the cause of death is rarely reported as either circumcision or anesthesia.

The media is just as guilty as the doctors in reporting these deaths - they slant the news and help cover up the mistakes. Here's one example: on October 20, 1998, a little baby boy named Justin Evans died in a Cleveland hospital as a DIRECT result of a botched circumcision. Within hours of the story appearing on the Channel 5 News website, the webpage was suddenly changed and the story was slanted to remove any blame from the doctors and the circumcision, and instead blame it on a very rare reaction to the anesthesia. Wake up, assholes - if they hadn't circumcised him, he wouldn't have been in the operating room and subjected to the anesthesia.

This was once a beautiful creation of God and nature. This child was once physically and spiritually whole. Not any more.

Functions of the Foreskin

The foreskin has protective, sensory and sexual functions.

The foreskin represents 50% to 80% of the skin system of the penis depending on the length of the penile shaft. The average foreskin has over three feet of veins, arteries, and capillaries, 240 feet of nerve fibres, and over 20,000 nerve endings. Unfolded, the adult foreskin measures 15 to 20 square inches.

Protective functions

Just as the eyelids protect the eyes, the foreskin protects the glans and keeps its surface soft, moist, and sensitive. It also maintains optimal warmth, pH balance and cleanliness. The glans itself contains no sebaceous glands that produce sebum that moisturise the skin. The foreskin produces the sebum that maintains proper health of the surface of the glans.

Coverage during erection

As it becomes erect, the penile shaft becomes thicker and longer. The double-layered foreskin provides the skin necessary to accommodate the expanded organ and to allow the penile skin to glide freely, smoothly, and pleasurably over the shaft and glans.

Immunological functions

The mucous membranes that line all body orifices are the body's first line of immunological defence. Apocrine glands in the foreskin produce antibacterial and anti-viral proteins such as lysozyme, which is also found in mother's milk. (special breaking news item: enzymes produced by foreskin kill AIDS virus ... details below)

Erogenous Sensitivity

The foreskin is as sensitive as the fingertips or the lips of the mouth. It contains a richer variety and greater concentration of specialised nerve receptors than any other part of the penis. These specialised nerve endings can discern motion, subtle changes in temperature, and fine gradations of texture.

Sexual Functions in Intercourse

One of the foreskin's functions is to facilitate smooth, gentle movement between the mucosal surfaces of the two partners during intercourse. The foreskin also plays a major role in the stimulation of the female "G-spot" (details below - Foreskin Amputation: What Is Lost Forever).

We sincerely thank the folks at www.webmagician.com/pubservice/ for providing the most accurate and thorough description of circumcision on the web. Their clarity and commitment to the truth in this regard is both courageous and inspiring. May the infants of the world be spared the mutilating procedure of circumcision for all future generations. With every good wish,

Society's Shame

Each and every single day, thousands of innocent, helpless, newborn baby boys are taken into an operating room, strapped onto a restraining table, arms and legs firmly bound, and literally have their penises 'skinned alive'.

First, surgical instruments are used to tear the skin loose from the head of the penis. This delicate, highly-innervated, extremely erogenous tissue is then peeled back from the helpless baby's tiny penis, like ripping a fingernail off a finger.

The peeled-back tissue is then placed in a vise-clamp, and the tissue is crushed for approximately 10 to 20 minutes, while the baby screams in abject horror, his poor body twisting and convulsing from the pain. His tiny heart nearly explodes as his heartbeat soars to a staggering two hundred or more beats per minute.

Then, as shock begins to set in, his breathing stops and his body turns blue. A doctor then takes a knife and amputates all this exquisite tissue from the baby's penis, forever altering that innocent child's life.

There are no painkillers, no sedatives, no anesthesia - the baby is wide awake through the entire horrific experience. All the while, the unrelenting, inescapable pain permeates every fiber of that little baby's mind. If he's one of the more fortunate ones, he'll lapse into a comatose, catatonic state as his body shuts down while trying to escape the bombardment of his senses with unimaginable pain.

After the amputation, there are no sedatives, no painkillers, no magical soothing ointments, lotions, or salves. His tiny, bloodied, nearly-skinless penis is a giant open wound - raw, bleeding, and extremely painful - and it is left in agony, to 'heal itself' over the course of the next several weeks or months.

And while the penis heals, each and every time the baby urinates he is subjected to incredible pain, as the ureic acid comes in contact with the exposed flesh.

This 'procedure' is euphemistically referred to as a 'simple circumcision'.

Is this what the doctor tells the parents? No. Parents are never told the truth about what will be done to their baby, because no sane parent would ever consent to such horrific mistreatment of their newborn child.

The sentence below appears to be more or less correct to the average person. Yet, upon closer inspection it contains as many as 23 lies! can you find them? See how good your "Jew lie detector" skills are. Answers provided upon request.

COUNT THE LIES

After being forced into the diaspora and wrongfully persecuted and expelled from many anti-Semitic countries and finally Holocausted, God's chosen people were finally allowed to go back home to Israel and through hard work and and no help turned a wasteland into a thriving democracy, peacefully co-existing with the Palestinians while enduring attacks from their terrorist Arab neighbors who envy them for being so fair, pious and generous.

- A. 20+ lies found: You are a whiz. You should be writing your own book on Jewish perfidy.
- B+. 15-20 lies found. You are really wise to the Jew sob story.
- B. 10-15 lies found. You realize that you are fed a bunch of BS.
- C. 5-10 lies found. At least you don't believe everything you hear.
- D. 1-5 lies found. There might be some hope for you yet. You need to really turn off the TV and read some books.
- F. No lies found. You are a total moron. No need for you to make any changes cuz you are totally brain dead anyway.

The slander-and-evade technique

How they pull the wool over everyone's eyes

COERCING US INTO POLITICALLY CORRECT SILENCE

By John Kaminski pseudoskylax@gmail.com <http://johnkaminski.info/>

No matter how you cut it, as a religion, Judaism is indefensible.

It simply cannot be defended. It is morally repugnant, provably psychopathological, and demonstrably harmful to all living things, including even the fearful, onanistic creators of its own odious and insane dogma.

That's why I keep screaming to the growing multitude of honest people waking up to the lethal reality of Jewish control of everything we see and do:

"Jews can't defend their position!

"They can only slander and evade as they cover up their crimes!"

They can only tell you what a bad person you for trying to bring out the truth about their crimes, when in fact you are only trying to be honest.

Everyone who has fought their way through the myriad layers of social conditioning concealing this ubiquitous Jewish criminality knows exactly what I'm talking about.

When we try to make a point about the slaughter of innocents in Gaza and around the world, or realize the senseless treatments we get for nonexistent illnesses, or notice how all of these Jewish media buffoons never mention radiation, Stuxnet, or Furkan Dogan, what do we hear from our Jewish "friends" or "supporters" — or, more to the point, sponsors?

"You're a hater!"

When we try to redress some grievous and thoughtless wrong that has been done to us by own government, we are told by our Jewish lawyer who pretends to defend us but really splits the proceeds of our fleeing with the prosecutor and the judge, "We all have to pitch in and pull together to guarantee our homeland's security." You go crying to your Jewish doctor about this, and he says, "Let me adjust your medication."

Let's get something straight right now. The original hate crime is the Talmud, which mandates that Jews kill or enslave everyone in the world, never tell the truth about anything, and always celebrate those sacred holidays on which Jews have slaughtered large numbers of non Jews without compassion and by deception.

Which is why it's so sardonically funny that Jews are implementing all these hate crime laws to protect psychologically twisted homosexuals, ignorantly rampaging gangsta Africans, and unctuous liberals who just want to watch TV, play computer games, and generally go along with whatever the government tells them to do because, as proud Americans, these pigeons have been taught that those perps called our elected officials have our best interests at heart.

And exactly who told us that? Why, none other than the Jewish censor who has screened every textbook you ever read, every encyclopedia you ever opened, as well as every song you've ever heard.

The Talmud is a malignant mind control program that has sabotaged, infected and metastasized every human endeavor with its utter lack of humanity and compassion, its pathological passion for blood and excrement, and its recommendation that it's OK to lie about anything as long as you're making a profit.

This may be a viable formula for survival, but it is no formula for actual life. Instead, it is the formula for mass death, which is the ultimate alienation from life, and which has been so vividly demonstrated by Lenin and Trotsky, or Sharon and Netanyahu, or Schiff and Gore, or most especially your local politician sucking Jewish teat and taking money under the table.

The question you get from Jews when you criticize any aspect of their behavior is . . . "Surely you're not talking about ALL Jews?" (which indicates at some level that they acknowledge what you're saying is true)

This is the first level of the deceptive distraction technique to derail your original thought (which was, don't forget, that you were talking about some particular Jewish atrocity, like the continuing obliteration of all Palestinians as well as all people who look like them).

It took me a long time to figure out how to answer this question, and get past the initial level of distraction and discouragement that Jews always use to deflect and detoxify your argument. Before I had mastered my anger, I used to say, "Right, Ace. Which 99 percent of Jews are the ones causing the problems?"

While sardonically hilarious to those who appreciate its meaning, I found it was not effective, because it abetted the distraction from the original argument about a specific Jewish atrocity, like the Auschwitz lie or the recent PR campaign that the swine flu shot was good for you, just to use two examples out of the millions that exist.

I've come to understand that a much more effective response to the Jewish attempt to always change what you really want to say is this:

"The real question is not about Jews at all. It's about Judaism, which is toxic to everyone, even its purveyors. The problems of the world are not caused by splinter groups of Judaism, they are caused by the central core tenets of Judaism, which are above all a psychotic call for vengeance for crimes against Jews, both actual and imagined."

All the great philosophers, from Buddha to Clif High, know that vengeance is never appropriate. And the fact that all our religions both teach and condone vengeance is the true measure of their illegitimacy.

Jews have no concept of compassion. Like invisible ink on a suspicious contract, it has been willingly erased, along with their consciences.

All these events Jews call crimes against Jews were characterized by EVERY OTHER culture in world history as compassionate neutralization of diseased pariahs distinguished in the arts of deception, robbery and murder, which is why they were kept compassionately segregated in their own fetid excremental ghettos, and actually banished at least 82 times over the course of their sad history.

And always banished for the same reason — loan sharking.

But then, due to the universal lack of moral fiber among the victims of Jewish perfidy, Jews are always allowed back in, using their time tested formula of bribery, blackmail and murder. No country has ever been taken over by Jews that has not been completely destroyed, turned into a twitching zombie of its former self, with every treasure plundered and every value profaned.

So now we see all too clearly what the effect has been since their release from their self-created ghetto incubi — confirming the predictions of Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson.

The Judaic philosophy has irremediably poisoned the whole world, and every living thing in it.

White Christians are the dumbest people on Earth because it is their hypocrisy that has generated all this trauma to the world by demonizing others as animals. And all for the pathological attraction to this cynically created abstraction better known as Almighty God.

Yeah, you took the money to keep your mouth shut. But what you didn't realize is that for anybody who does that, you should know that eventually they come back and take your money, too, as well as everything you own, which is exactly what they're doing now.

There is no justification for how the Jews have damaged the world.

It is the hypocrisy of white religions that has allowed the Jews to succeed.

Ultimately the blame all falls on hypocritical white men, who did not possess a philosophy of sufficient rectitude to prevent them from falling to the blandishments of the Jews and hastening the destruction of every single thing we ever loved.
